Journalist Death

CPJ began compiling detailed records on journalist deaths from 1992. CPJ applies strict journalistic standards when investigating a death, an important aspect of their research is determining the death being work-related.

CPJ defines journalist as people who cover news on public affairs through any media. This includes print, photographs, radio, TV and online.

Explore each spiral on the left to see the total amount of journalist that have died in each country and lear more about who they are.

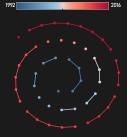

How to read:

The spiral represents each journalist that has died.

The inner part of the spiral is the past and it grows by chronological order by date.

When there's a gap in the lines between the dots it means there was a time gap, the bigger the gap the longer the time period was between the deaths.

The colour changes by year, the death that have happened in the past are in blue and recent years are in red
